Pro-Jihadist Forum Member Calls for Targeting US, Western Teachers at US, International Schools

TRN2014102635156760 Al-Minbar al-Islami Jihadist Forum in Arabic 25 Oct 14

[Message by forum member Rab'i Bin Amir, user number 22674, calling on "lone wolves" to target US and Western teachers in US and International schools as easy preys; the undated message is titled: "To Lone Wolves: Target American and Other Western Teachers in American and International Schools. They Are Easy Preys; Repercussions May Surprise You."]

"To Lone Wolves: Target American and Other Western Teachers in American and International Schools. They Are Easy Preys; Repercussions May Surprise You."

To Lone Wolves in the Arabian Peninsula Particularly and in Other Countries in the World in General: Target American and Other Western Teachers in American and International Schools. They Are Easy Preys; Repercussions May Surprise You.

First: Note on International Schools

The concept behind establishing international schools began in the middle of the 19th Century to educate children of foreign communities in host countries. In the beginning, those schools were established and managed by individuals and corporations with the help of some foreign governments, like the US Department of Defense, to educate the children of diplomats, employees of oil and other companies, and Christian missionary organizations as well as some institutions that had offices or branches in the host countries. Those schools were small in number. They were not interested in making profits, but they were interested in offering the kind and standard of education as approved in their countries to their children in host countries. The concept later developed and the number of international schools grew immensely when American and British curricula became the favorite for many families and students, especially among the Arabs who adore everything that is American or Western. Consequently, motivated by investment and making profits, many wealthy Arabs and non-Arabs, established international schools for teaching American and British curricula. They opened their doors for local students wishing to obtain the American Diploma, the IGCSE, or the International Baccalaureate.

There is a great demand on the international schools because they offer the opportunity of teaching western syllabi to students in their home countries without having to travel to American or Britain. Graduates of those schools can also join American or British universities more easily than their peers who study local syllabi.

Regardless of the nationality of the school owner be it Arab or non- Arab, and regardless of the nationalities of the students, all international schools hire American, British, and Australian teachers at varied [percentage according to the school syllabus. The number of British teachers is normally higher than that of American teachers at schools that offer IGCSE, but this does not mean anything to us, because we are only interested in beheading those impure crusaders, whether they are Americans or otherwise.

Although the purpose of this article is to encourage lone wolf operations against American teachers in Muslim countries (and I do not say Muslim abodes), I would like to draw the attention to what the brothers already know but only to remind them that western governments, especially the US Government, care greatly for international schools because they are the active way to brainwash the Muslim youths and teach them their lowly culture and indecent lifestyles. Unfortunately, they have made a great success, but we will discuss this later when we talk about the repercussions of beheading western teachers.

A look at the number of international schools in each country will not only show the magnitude of the available catch, but it will also show how fascinated the Arabs are with everything that is western, even in education. It will also show some oddities. Despite the great difference in area and population between a country like Qatar, for example and Egypt there are around 40 international schools in each of them. Is this not one of the strangest oddities? As for the state of prostitutes (The United Arab Emirates), it has 40 schools. The abyss of Al Salul (Saudi Arabia) has 30 schools. Jordan has seven, Turkey has 23, Bahrain has 12, Sultanate of Oman has 15, Kuwait has 46, Sudan has four, Tunisia has one, Nigeria has 11, Morocco has seven, Malaysia has 26, India has 30, Pakistan has five, Bangladesh has eight, and Indonesia has 31 schools. It should be noted that I have focused on registered schools that are under the supervision of international institutions. Most of the teachers there might be from our people who have studied abroad.

Second: Why do we say that the repercussions of targeting g the teachers will surprise you?

"Take for example an American officer on a military base or an American official in an oil company or otherwise and compare the repercussions of eliminating them to those of eliminating a teacher in an international school.

Let us begin with the relation of the officer or the official with his surrounding community. The officer in particular lives on a base away from residential areas, and he has no social relations with local residents. It is true that he goes out of the base for recreation or shopping from time to time. Targeting him requires good detection. After eliminating him, there will be no noticeable change in the nature of work on his base or in his company except for eulogizing him and classifying the incident as an individual occurrence that will not be repeated. He is one in hundreds of personnel in the same facility or company. Work will continue. On the other hand, a teacher has important social relations with the surrounding community. He mentors a number of students. He sees them every day and sees their parents periodically and in parties and special occasions. He and his colleagues know each other and live close to one another. He is easy to target even if he lives in a well-guarded compound. He goes to his school and back home using the same road. He is a human being like everybody else and he eats and drinks like you do. He goes to shops and supermarkets and visits recreational places. What will happen when he is eliminated? The news will create waves that will shake the entire community around him at various levels and will cause great confusion in the educational process. His students will panic, and so will their parents. The sense of security will vanish and will be replaced with fear from what has happened and fear from the future. These are psychological repercussions that do not happen to an officer or an official in an institution, and they cannot be underestimated. Students will miss the teacher of that subject, and the school may close temporarily until everybody absorbs the situation and until they become able to deal with the new security condition. A school is not an isolated military base, but it is in the middle of the city, which will increase the security burdens and cause parents to panic. They will take into account the possibility of repeating the accident and fearing lest their children might be harmed should the incident reoccur. Some parents will consider moving their children to another school or another city.

Presuming that the school might pass through the preliminary repercussions, it will still have to substitute the teacher. For God's sake, who would apply for the job knowing that their colleague was killed there? If the accident results in eliminating more than one teacher, closing the school for a long time will be inevitable. If replacement of one teacher is not easy, what would you think of replacing more than one teacher and what will the repercussions of closing the school be?

If some of -or all- the children of diplomats and executives of international corporations go to that school, they will most probably leave the country back to their original countries for educating their children or move to another city outside the host country. Then, the city or the country where the elimination of the teacher takes place becomes a hardship post, a name that many crusaders do not like, because it will not be suitable for families, and future employees there will have to be single or leave their families back home.

By closing the school, the Arab investor will be harmed, but closing a school of this kind is a closure of den of mischief that spoils the minds of our children. In brief, eliminating teachers will mostly lead to closing schools and departure of crusaders to other countries to educate their children under better security circumstances. This, also, will have repercussions that only God knows.

If students of the targeted school are of the same nationality, i.e., Arabs and Muslims like us, the school will also close, in which case parents will think twice before registering their children in another international school with targeted teachers. Some of them may also send their children to boarding schools in another country, and this is not an easy thing.

Third: What Is the Security Condition of Targeted Teachers? Why Do We Say: It Is Easy Prey?

"The security condition varies according to the school. Security arrangements of the American International School in Jeddah and the Advanced Generations School, for example, are very strict. Some of them live in highly secured residential compounds and some others live ordinary houses like other inhabitants in the area. Securing the school is not among our concerns, because we focus on lone wolf operations against individuals and not against buildings, unless the wolf alone or with his brothers wants to eliminate the infidels inside their workplace, or the school. If they manage to enter the facility in some way or another with their requirements and weapons, that will be fine. However, as we have mentioned, teachers can be targeted at their time of arrival to or departure from school, or during their shopping at supermarkets or mega shopping centers.

Some schools use buses to transport teachers to and from school; and this will be a precious catch. Targeting the bus (I do not say blowing it up, though I am not against it) while teachers are getting on or out of it will easily kill a number of them in a few minutes with one gun. The simpler the operation is the more successful it becomes. This will certainly lead to closing the school.

In a conversation with one of the brothers from the Land of the Quivers [Egypt], he told me that most international schools provide housing for the teachers in the high class Ma'adi suburb of Cairo. He also said that all international schools there use buses to transport teachers from Ma'adi to the schools and back. Buses stop at special assembly points to pick and drop teachers every day. He also said that there are no guards or escorts to guard those buses. Aside from going to school and back by bus, dozens of those infidels wander along the streets of Ma'adi and visit its restaurants and shops. This means that this area that has some kind of security ease (because it is a residential area and US and UK embassies are not there) is a good opportunity to target a considerable number of teachers in one day. You should imagine the impact and the terror that will shake the hearts of infidels. However, I told my friend that I do not count much on Egyptians.

I believe that what I have mentioned here is enough for the time being, and maybe later I will come back with more details.

Come on, lions of the Arabian Peninsula and other lions, prepare yourselves and reap the heads of the crusader teachers. Make their families pack their luggage and say good bye.

It is God we are all about. The last of our is that praise be to God, the Lord of all Creation."
